If these requirements are not met, it is not qualified vocational training.

In-company further training includes, for example, qualification measures, internships, practical phases following a course of study or trainee programs.

The residence permit can be issued regardless of your previous qualifications, i.e. it is not linked to any special educational requirements. The training company will check whether you are suitable for training.

In the case of qualified vocational training, you must always provide proof of sufficient German language skills, unless you have attended a German language course beforehand. A German language course prior to the qualified vocational training is covered by the residence permit and can be attended before the start of the actual training measure. For other training or further education, you must first apply for a residence permit for the language course and then for a residence permit for training and further education purposes.

During qualified vocational training, you are entitled to work up to 20 hours per week in employment that is independent of your vocational training.

Self-employment is not permitted under any circumstances.

You can apply for a vocational training allowance for the duration of your training or further training and thus contribute to your livelihood.

Training and further education companies that would like to train or further educate a person from abroad can apply for the accelerated skilled worker procedure at the foreigners authority on behalf of the person, which can facilitate and accelerate the entry of skilled workers.

The residence permit for the purpose of in-company
