Sachverhalt

examination is a requirement for admission to take the final examination. The results of the interim examination are an important indicator for you if you wish to be admitted to the final examination early.

Interim examinations consist of a written examination part and, if required, a further practical examination part. The two parts of the examination are usually taken on different days. The written part is usually taken on a specified day at the same time throughout Germany.

An interim examination is conducted regionally by the competent authorities (e.g. Chamber of Commerce and Industry) for all trainees and apprentices at the approximate mid-point of their period of training. The date is stipulated in the training regulations.

If you have a training agreement with a company, this arrangement will have been reported to the competent authority for the region (e.g. Chamber of Commerce and Industry) by the training employer. The competent authority therefore knows the time period within which you must take your interim examination. You will therefore receive notification regarding the examination from the competent authority, either by letter or via email.

The holding of the interim examination is organised by the competent authority for the region in consultation with the voluntary examination board. The examination board, consisting of employer representatives, employee representatives and instructor representatives, assesses your examination performance and awards your grade.

The examination result decided by the examination board is communicated to the competent authority. You will receive your results in the form of a certificate of examination attendance.

Interim examinations are only held in professions in which the Regulations do not provide for a two-part final examination.

Modul
Sachverhalt

Attendance of interim examinations is mandatory for all trainees and apprentices.

Nevertheless, you may not be required to sit an interim examination if your training arrangement with the training employer has allowed you to have at least two years accredited to you for other completed vocational training.

Upon request, you can also take an interim examination if you are on a retraining programme; however, in this case either you or the retraining provider must pay the costs of the examination.

Erforderliche Unterlagen

- Official photo ID for verification of identity at the examination
- If appropriate, the "Request for special consideration due to disability" form

Voraussetzungen

- You must have a registered training or retraining arrangement with a training provider.
- Your training regulations stipulate an interim examination

Kosten

The examination fee is governed by the fee regulations of the competent authority for the region. The training employer must bear the costs.

If you are retraining, you must pay the costs yourself and must clarify with the German Federal Employment Agency () or the training provider whether you are eligible for funding assistance.

Verfahrensablauf

As a rule, the competent authority responsible for you will notify you of the upcoming interim examination.

- After registering for the interim examination, you will receive an invitation to all the examination parts.
- At the examination site, you must provide proof of your identity as an authorised examination candidate.
- You sit the written examination.
- You take the practical examination, insofar as this is stipulated.
