of vehicles in question requires a driving licence of categories C or D.

There is a distinction between simple and accelerated initial qualification.

You will acquire accelerated initial qualification by attending a training course at a recognised training centre and successfully taking a theoretical examination at the Chamber of Commerce and Industry (, IHK). Participation in instruction is mandatory here. The theoretical examination, in turn, offers simplification for holders of certificates of field expertise in accordance with the Regulations on Access to Occupations in the Road Haulage Sector.

If you obtained your driving licence prior to 10 September 2008 (bus) or 10 September 2009 (lorry), you do not have to demonstrate initial qualification ('vested rights').

You do not need to present a driving licence for the accelerated initial qualification.

The type of examination administered varies depending on the requirements that apply:

1. Regular examination: 'Accelerated initial qualification'

You must take the regular examination if you are unable to provide proof of an examination of expertise in road freight transport or passenger transport ('transport manager examination') for the relevant type of transport, or if you have not taken an examination for the (accelerated) initial qualification for the other type of transport.

1. Examination for drivers changing vehicle types: 'Accelerated initial qualification'

You can take the examination for drivers changing vehicle types if you have successfully passed the examination for the respective other vehicle type.. Accordingly, in the training course offering accelerated initial qualification of drivers changing vehicle types, only the specific characteristics of the type of transport are addressed. The future bus driver, for example, will be taught how to behave with regard to passengers, as this was not part of his first initial qualification in road freight transport.

This also applies to drivers who have obtained the driving licence for the other type of transport prior to the relevant reference date (vested rights).

1. Examination for career changers: 'Accelerated initial qualification'

You can take the examination for career changers if you have valid demonstration of an examination of expertise for the type of transport for which the examination is to be taken.

As the examination of expertise does not test for all of the knowledge a driver must have, as the holder of a certificate of expertise, you must also acquire the initial qualification.
