housing.

If you have income, the contributions will reduce your income to be offset against social assistance. Otherwise, these contributions can be recognized as a separate need.

The monthly contributions to voluntary statutory health insurance and social long-term care insurance as well as the so-called supplementary contribution can be taken into account. Contributions to a solidarity association can also be taken into account.

Your contributions can only be taken into account if they are reasonable. Contributions to statutory health insurance and social long-term care insurance are always considered reasonable.

The following contributions are considered reasonable for private health and long-term care insurance:

- for private health insurance:
 - halved contribution in the basic tariff
 - Contribution in the standard tariff
- for private long-term care insurance:
 - up to the amount of the halved contribution for statutory long-term care insurance
 - Contribution in the standard tariff

In the basic tariff, the benefits of private health insurance are comparable to those of statutory health insurance. You can request information from your insurance company as to how high your contribution would be under the basic tariff. The social welfare office or social assistance provider will then check whether you are in need of assistance, i.e. whether you could receive support, on the basis of the full contribution to the basic tariff. If this is the case, the contribution to the basic tariff is halved.

This halving alone may mean that you are no longer in need of assistance and can once again cover your living expenses yourself. If you still need support, the social welfare office or social assistance provider will take the halved contribution in the basic tariff into account when calculating your entitlement.

Apart from a few exceptions, the social welfare office or social assistance provider cannot grant benefits for past periods. There are therefore no retroactive benefits.

Contributions are therefore only taken into account for current contributions from the date on which the social welfare office or social assistance provider became aware of the need. Contributions in arrears are generally not paid. The social welfare office or social assistance provider cannot recognize personal contributions either.

Contributions to a solidarity association are appropriate up to half of the maximum contribution of the statutory health insurance.

Voraussetzungen

- You are entitled to social assistance and do not receive citizen's allowance or benefits for asylum seekers. You are obliged to pay contributions to (statutory, voluntary or private) health or long-term care insurance under an existing insurance relationship.
- You are in need of assistance. This is the case if you:
 - cannot support yourself from your own income and assets
 - are also unable to support yourself with the help of other people, such as your wife or husband; this also applies to registered partnerships and cohabiting couples if the partners live together
 - have no or insufficient entitlement to other social benefits, for example
 - child benefit
 - housing benefit
 - pension
 - unemployment benefit
 - sickness benefit

- Parental allowance

Certain assets are not taken into account, for example

- smaller amounts of cash, so-called protected assets:
 - EUR 10,000 per adult
 - EUR 500 per child
- an appropriate house property

There are also allowances on certain incomes. This means that you do not necessarily have to use all of your disposable income and assets before you can receive social assistance.
