Teaser	If you are registered in the Central Register of Foreigners, you can request that your data not be disclosed under certain conditions.
Volltext	If you are a foreigner living in Germany for more than 90 days, your personal data will be stored in a central register for foreigners. Public authorities can obtain information about you from this register. Non-public agencies, authorities of other states and supranational or intergovernmental agencies can also receive data from the Central Register of Foreigners if the legal requirements are met. You can apply for your personal data to be blocked if you believe that you or your relatives are in danger. The data will be blocked if: • your interests worthy of protection or those of another person may be affected by the transmission of the data, or • at the request of the witness protection service. Blocked data are provided with a transmission block. They may only be transferred to non-public bodies, authorities of other states or intergovernmental bodies in exceptional cases (without your opinion). If there is an overriding public interest, the block is also effective vis-à-vis public authorities. How long the block applies depends on the individual case.

Erforderliche Unterlagen	• proof of your identity • where appropriate, suitable evidence that you or another person may be put at risk by the transfer
Voraussetzungen	• You can demonstrate in a concrete and comprehensible manner that your interests or the interests of another person worthy of protection may be affected by the transfer of your data.
Kosten	none
Verfahrensablauf	You can apply for the transfer block from the Central Register of Foreigners in writing or in person: If you apply for the transfer block in person: • Find out which documents you need from your competent foreigners authority. If necessary, make an appointment. • At your appointment, a member of staff will listen to you to find out the reasons for your request. A decision will then be made on your application. • You will then receive a written decision. If your request is approved, the information block will apply immediately. If you request the transfer block in writing: • Inform yourself at your responsible foreigners authority which application form and which further documents you need. If there is no application form, an informal signed application is sufficient. • Send your application and the required documents to your Aliens' Registration Office, the Central Register of Foreigners, or the branch office of the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees responsible for processing your asylum application. • After your application and documents have been examined, you will receive a written decision. If your application is examined positively, the transfer block will apply immediately. Note: Blocks on transmission can also be saved ex officio in the case of interests worthy of protection or
