With your application for an administrative procedure, BaFin checks whether the payment service provider has rightly rejected your application for a basic account.

If the payment service provider wrongly refuses to open a basic account, BaFin will order the payment service provider to open your basic account.

Note: Once you have submitted your application for a basic account, the payment service provider must offer you the conclusion of a basic account agreement within 10 business days or notify you in writing of a rejection of the application within the same period.
