Teaser	You will receive the normal old-age pension (standard old-age pension) on application if you meet certain requirements.
Volltext	You can apply for the normal old-age pension once you have reached the standard retirement age. The entry age for the normal old-age pension has been gradually raised from 65 to 67 since 2012. The standard retirement age of 67 only applies to those born in 1964 or later. You must also complete a minimum insurance period (waiting period) of 15 years to qualify for the pension. In addition to the insurance period with the Landwirtschaftliche Alterskasse, periods from other pension schemes, such as the Deutsche Rentenversicherung, can also be taken into account. account if they have been paid without gaps. If a pension equalization was carried out in your favour, the transferred entitlement will be converted into waiting period months. Periods from other pension schemes:

- Periods from other pension schemes, for example periods in the statutory pension insurance scheme, can also be counted towards your qualifying period.
- If the external periods overlap with those of the agricultural pension fund, the external periods cannot be credited at the same time. This also applies if you were exempt from compulsory insurance with the pension fund as an entrepreneur during the same period. However, an exemption from compulsory insurance as a contributing family member does not preclude the crediting of third-party periods completed during this time.

The following periods can be taken into account:

- Compulsory contribution periods to a statutory German pension insurance institution and equivalent periods of social insurance in the former GDR,
- periods of exemption from insurance in the statutory pension insurance scheme, for example as a civil servant Judge professional or regular soldier and as another person with similar civil servant status
- Periods of exemption from compulsory insurance in the statutory pension insurance scheme, for example Employees and self-employed persons who belong to a professional pension scheme Teachers and educators at private schools, if there is civil servant-like coverage
- certain foreign periods under supranational and intergovernmental law
