Teaser	If you want to complain about a provider for violating the provisions of the Geoblocking Regulation, you can file a complaint with the Federal Network Agency.
Volltext	When European customers are not allowed to purchase goods or services across borders by suppliers operating within the European Union (EU) single market, this is known as geo-blocking. The same is true if the goods or services are not offered on the same terms as to nationals. For example, suppliers may offer their goods and services to different groups of customers or in different countries in different languages and at different prices and conditions, but if a customer from another EU country wants to order from the supplier's domestic website, he must be able to do so at the same prices and conditions as nationals. According to the Geoblocking Regulation, discrimination against customers on the grounds of <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • place of residence, • place of establishment or • nationality is not permitted. Customers include consumers who

- have the nationality of an EU country, or
- have their residence in an EU country and end-user companies that

- are established in an EU country and
- use services exclusively for end-use or
- purchase goods for end-use.

The Geoblocking Regulation does not protect businesses that resell, transform, process, rent or subcontract goods or services.

There are also numerous exceptions. These relate both to certain types of services and to certain types of unequal treatment, for example under other statutory provisions.

In the event of a breach of the provisions of the Geoblocking Regulation, the Federal Network Agency for Electricity, Gas, Telecommunications, Post and Railway (BNetzA) can issue orders or impose fines on German providers.

Against providers in other EU countries, the BNetzA can request the competent national authority of the EU country concerned to issue measures within the framework of the European CPC network.

CPC stands for "Consumer Protection Cooperation" and refers to a European network of authorities whose task is to enforce consumer rights.

You can submit a complaint about a violation of the Geoblocking Regulation online via the "Geoblocking complaint form" on the BNetzA website.
