railroad system are designed in such a way that safe and continuous rail traffic is guaranteed in Germany and Europe.

The tasks of a conformity assessment include testing, inspection, evaluation and certification decisions. The tests include components and component groups on which the interoperability of the railroad system depends and which are required in the following areas, for example:

- Infrastructure, for example, tracks, switches, level crossings, bridges, tunnels, stations, safety and protective equipment
- Energy: For example, railroad power supply, catenary systems such as overhead lines and power consumption measuring and charging equipment
- Trackside and on-board train control or train protection and signaling
- Railroad vehicles, for example wagon body structure, current collection devices, traction and energy conversion devices, braking systems, couplings, bogies, axles, doors

Recognition as a NB

Recognition as a NB is valid for a maximum of 5 years. It can be extended for a further 5 years. The EBA reports this to the European Commission for publication in the New Approach Notified and Designated Organizations (NANDO) database as the basis for EU-wide NB action. Recognition is also published on the EBA website.

The EBA regularly monitors recognized NBs.
