Teaser	When the protection of your trade mark expires, you can renew the protection.
Volltext	The term of protection of a registered trade mark begins on the date of filing and expires 10 years after the end of the month in which the application was originally filed. You may extend the trade mark protection any number of times, for periods of 10 years at a time. Each renewal takes effect from the day after the previous term of protection expires. It is entered in the register and published. The renewal may cover all or part of the goods and services. If the term of protection is not renewed, the trade mark right will lapse.
Erforderliche Unterlagen	• If a mark is to be renewed for only part of the registered goods and services, use the form Request for renewal of a trade mark Note: If you wish to renew the trade mark for all registered goods and services, all you need to do is pay the fees by the deadline. No application is necessary.
