enter and stay in Germany.

If you are an EU and EEA citizen and have resided legally in Germany for a period of five years, you can acquire a permanent right of residence. The right of permanent residence arises directly by operation of law. You can apply to the Foreigners' Registration Office for a certificate of permanent residence.

Under certain conditions, you can acquire a permanent right of residence before the expiry of five years, e.g. if you:

- have resided permanently in Germany for at least three years, have been gainfully employed in Germany or in another Member State of the European Union during the last twelve months and have in the meantime retired because of their age (reaching the age of 65) or because of an early retirement scheme;
- have ceased their profession practised in Germany or in another Member State of the European Union as a result of a total incapacity for work caused by an accident at work or an occupational disease and which gives entitlement to a pension in Germany;
- have given up your profession practised in Germany or in another Member State of the European Union as a result of a complete reduction in earning capacity, after having previously resided permanently in Germany for at least two years, or
- have been permanently employed in Germany for three years, are now working in another Member State of the European Union, but still have a residence in Germany to which you return at least once a week.

The certificate of permanent residence is issued by the Foreigners' Registration Office after it has checked whether you have reached the required periods of residence in Germany. For this purpose, it is not necessary that you have resided continuously in Germany during the required period. Certain absences from the Federal territory are irrelevant for the acquisition of the right of permanent residence. Thus, even when leaving the Federal territory for a total of six months a year, for the performance of military service or alternative service or for good cause once for up to twelve consecutive months (e.g. due to a serious illness, studies, vocational training), permanent residence can be assumed. Periods of imprisonment which have not been suspended are not taken into account for the acquisition of the right of permanent residence.

If you have interrupted your stay in Germany for a longer period of time, it is not possible to add up previous and subsequent periods in order to achieve the minimum period of residence required to acquire the right of permanent residence.

If necessary, the immigration authority can also check the legality of your stay, i.e. whether you have fulfilled the requirements of the right to freedom of movement during the entire period.

With the acquisition of the right of permanent residence, you receive an improved ("consolidated") legal position, regardless of your nationality. Thus, the right of permanent residence is independent of the continued existence of the conditions for freedom of movement. In addition, your protection against expulsion increases. However, if you leave Germany for more than two consecutive years, this may result in the loss of the right of permanent residence.

The certificate is issued indefinitely and confirms that you have acquired the right of permanent residence. The document does not constitute an identity document, i.e. You cannot prove your identity with the certificate. Therefore, it does not carry a photograph, nor is there an obligation to update the information in the document in case of changes (e.g. you do not have to have the certificate updated if you have a new passport or identity card issued or your address changes).

If you have not yet reached the age of 18, your legal representative (e.g. the person entitled to personal care) must agree to the planned stay.
