Sachverhalt

- of Commerce and Industry;
- the training venue, in particular information on the location of practical components of the training such as firefighting;
 - the training times, taking into account breaks and travel times to and from the training venue for the practical components of the course (travel times are not added to the scheduled teaching units);
 - assignment of the topics to the subject area covered by the relevant course curriculum;
 - form of teaching (teaching method requirements);
 - the naming of the practical parts of the training;
 - the professional qualifications of the training instructors as well as proof of their ability to impart knowledge to adults in a training context confirmed through appropriate certificates and supporting documents;
 - the teaching material available;
 - the training venue and its facilities and equipment.

As a training course provider, you must have premises suitable for conducting the theoretical instruction units of the part-practical components as well as the necessary training material. In addition, your training instructors must possess appropriate field-related and teaching qualifications.

The responsible Chamber of Commerce and Industry is entitled to inspect your premises and the training material. The Chamber of Commerce and Industry can also contact the persons you have indicated as training instructors in order to arrange appointments for any additional assessment interviews that may be required.

If the requirements are met, official recognition will be notified by the locally responsible Chamber of Commerce and Industry. This notification will state the training courses that you are permitted to run.
