stones, plastic marks or metal bolts) serve to clarify the course of the border on site and can thus also make a lasting contribution to border peace, e.g. also to avoid neighbourhood disputes over the course of the borders.

Therefore, you should consider having the demarcation of the boundary points carried out at the same time. She will be happy to advise the commissioned surveying office on this.

In the case of a demarcation applied for later, which in turn may only be carried out by an authorised surveying authority in a new administrative procedure, the boundary points to be marked must always be determined first, which may result in additional costs.
