Teaser	If you are planning to plant new woodland and reforest wooded meadows, you must submit a corresponding application.
Volltext	The creation of new forests and the afforestation of forest meadows may only be carried out with the prior approval of the competent authority under state law. If you are planning such a project and submit a corresponding application, the competent authority, with the involvement of the lower forestry authority (and other specialist authorities involved), will check whether the legal requirements have been met. Once you have received the relevant approval, you can implement your plans. Your application for a new forest plantation will be examined and decided on by the district committees of the administrative districts or by the magistrates of the independent cities. Other specialist authorities (e.g. the forestry office as the lower forestry authority) are involved in the process. For areas larger than five hectares, the decision is also made in consultation with the regional planning authority and the higher forestry
