Teaser	You can apply for a study place within the framework of the preliminary quotas for university admission to study human medicine.
Volltext	Applications can be submitted annually for study places with subsequent employment as a GP, primarily in rural areas, as well as for study places with subsequent employment in one of the Hessian health authorities. Applicants are selected in a two-stage selection process in which the three medical universities are involved. The main focus is on the personal and subject-specific aptitude of the applicants. A university entrance qualification is a prerequisite for application. The selected applicants study in Frankfurt am Main, Giessen and Marburg. They receive special support as part of the "Hessian Path" and are thus specifically prepared for their future work. After completing their specialist training in general medicine, internal medicine or pediatrics and adolescent medicine, the trained physicians will practice their profession for ten years in a region of the state that is medically undersupplied or at risk of being undersupplied.

Verfahrensablauf

Apply electronically, attach all supporting documents and submit your binding application. The application will be formally checked and evaluated in the first stage of the selection process.

A maximum of twice the number of applicants for the available study places will be invited to the second stage of the selection procedure. A standardized and structured selection interview takes place, which is evaluated by a selection committee.

The selection decision is then made on the basis of a ranking list according to the points achieved in each case.

Finally, the selected applicants are reported to Hochschulstart.de. Shortly afterwards, they will receive a binding offer of admission as part of the central admissions procedure.
