Volltext	Children, young people and parents can turn to educational and family counselling centres with general and specific questions about education. These counselling centres are also available in the event of personal or family problems, as well as questions and conflicts relating to separation and divorce from parents. Of course, other legal guardians or single parents can also make use of the counselling services. Children and young people can also turn to a counselling centre or apply for support without the presence of their parents. In addition to the educational and family counselling centres, the General Social Service of the Youth Welfare Office offers help and support. In addition to the above-mentioned counselling services, parents, children and young people can access a virtual counselling service on the Internet. Different circumstances can be the reason to use a counselling centre: depending on the age of the child or adolescent, developmental delays, sleep, eating and speech disorders or fears may occur. At school age, performance and behavioral problems sometimes occur, which can increase in intensity during puberty. Parents often feel overwhelmed with their parenting tasks. Sometimes relationship difficulties of the parents require professional help, or there are problems with separation and divorce. Educational and family counselling centres provide valuable support and accompaniment for the necessary conflict resolution.
