Volltext

Forestry associations are associations under private law of

- recognized forestry associations,
- forestry associations,
- forestry cooperatives or
- forest cooperatives

Their aim is to work towards adapting forestry production and the sale of forestry products to the requirements of the market.

Forestry associations only have the following tasks:

- Informing and advising members,
- Participation of members in forestry planning,
- Adjustment of sales to demand;
- market-oriented storage of products;
- centralized timber marketing;
- procurement and joint use of machinery and equipment.

This makes it possible to compensate for the disadvantages of individual forest owners and results in a balanced supply to the wood-processing industry.

As a forest owner, you can also join a forestry association under certain conditions, especially if you cannot be a member of a forestry association or a forestry association. To do so, submit an application to the forestry authority responsible for you.

Erforderliche Unterlagen

- Written application by the Chairman for recognition
- Invitation to the inaugural meeting
- Attendance list from this inaugural meeting
- Address list of the board members
- Current list of members - at least 7 members, if the legal form of an association with commercial business operations is chosen, stating the respective member
