a wholly or partially disputed claim must be pursued through the legal channels provided for by general law. If an enforceable debt instrument already exists for the claim, it is up to the disputing party to pursue the objection using the generally admissible legal means. If such a debt instrument does not yet exist, it is the responsibility of the alleged creditor to pursue the establishment of the claim through the legal channels generally provided for this purpose. The disputing party must therefore expect that legal action will be taken against him/her because of the objection.

Verfahrensablauf

Insolvency claims must first be registered with the insolvency administrator (see text Insolvency claims or Registering insolvency claims).

The claims filed on time will then be examined. This can take place in a so-called verification meeting or after a verification deadline in a written procedure. As a rule, you can find this date or cut-off date in the decision by which the insolvency proceedings were opened.

Subsequent verification dates or cut-off dates, in particular for claims filed late, are ordered by separate resolutions of the insolvency court (insofar as the necessary legal requirements are met in each individual case).

Bearbeitungsdauer
Frist

A written objection (contestation) must be submitted to the insolvency court by the examination date or examination deadline at the latest.
