part) after four semesters (two years) and the Abitur generally after six semesters (three years).

If you have an intermediate school-leaving certificate (Fachoberschulreife), you usually start in the first semester. Depending on your previous knowledge, you can apply to be admitted to the second or third semester.

If you do not have a secondary school leaving certificate, you will usually attend the preliminary course at the evening grammar school or a corresponding course at the evening secondary school. Attendance of the preliminary course or evening secondary school can be replaced by an aptitude test.

The decision on placement is made by the school management.

Classes usually take place five evenings a week. Most colleges of further education that offer evening classes also offer morning classes and some also offer afternoon classes. The courses offered comprise at least 20 lessons per week, and at least 12 lessons in the preliminary course.

The Abitur-Online course with reduced attendance times at the school is a special offer in the evening grammar school course: Around half of the lessons are completed in self-study via a learning platform at home on a computer and with supplementary written learning materials.
