and sport or sport/health promotion are not assigned to any subject area.

In the vocational learning area, the profile-forming subjects and, as a rule, mathematics, a natural science, English, the second foreign language, computer science and economics are taught. These subjects prepare students specifically for a relevant course of study.

Interdisciplinary subjects are German, religious education, sport and social studies with history.

Schools can offer individual and regional specializations in the area of differentiation.

A work placement of at least four weeks is carried out in year 12.

The Abitur examination and the first part of the final vocational examination must be taken at the end of year 13. The second part of the final vocational examination for state-certified assistants takes place after a school-supported twelve-week work placement in year 14.

After the Abitur examination and the first part of the final vocational examination in year 14, nursery teachers complete a twelve-month work placement which ends with the second part of the final vocational examination.

After successfully completing the course, you will acquire the following qualifications

- General higher education entrance qualification (Abitur)
- Vocational qualification according to state law

Follow-up options:

- Study at all universities
- Entry into professional life

Are you pursuing the goal of acquiring vocational knowledge, skills and abilities as well as the general higher education entrance qualification?

By combining general and vocational education and training, these courses will take you to the Abitur, provided you are eligible to attend the upper secondary school.
