Volltext	If your driving licence has been withdrawn by a court or by the driving licence authority and you want to drive a motor vehicle on the road again, you must obtain a new driving licence. In principle, the regulations on the initial issue of a driving licence apply to the new issue of a driving licence after revocation or resignation. This means that the driving licence is not "automatically" reissued. Rather, the driving licence authority must thoroughly examine whether the applicant is suitable and competent to drive a motor vehicle. If the driving licence authority has withdrawn your driving licence because you have accumulated too many points in the central traffic register, a new driving licence may be issued at the earliest six months after the withdrawal of the driving licence takes effect. This period does not begin until the driving licence is resigned.
