Volltext	If you are considering giving your child up for adoption, you will receive comprehensive advice from an adoption agency. Since parents irrevocably relinquish all rights and duties as parents when they give their child up for adoption, they should carefully consider such a decision. If you feel overwhelmed with your child, social workers from the youth welfare offices or counselling centres run by independent or local authorities are available to talk to the parents about their worries and problems. The parents can be told about various support services and shown perspectives. In a crisis situation, for example, foster parents could temporarily take care of the child. Expectant mothers can turn to a pregnancy counselling centre with their doubts, which also offers anonymous counselling if desired.
