Teaser	A building project is often preceded by the acquisition of a plot of land. If parts of a larger plot of land are acquired, it is usually necessary to create a parcel of land and define the new parcel boundary. The acquisition of parts of other plots may also be necessary if a plot is too small for the building project or if the access road required for the development of the building plot is missing.

An initial determination of the parcel boundaries (boundary determination) is required if the part of the property to be divided is not a parcel recorded in the land register. The property register is updated with the results of the cadastral survey and new parcels are created. These are then entered in the land register as independent plots of land, which can then be bought or sold as
