If you want to remove protected trees, shrubs or other woody plants or cut them back considerably, a licence may be required. Whether a tree or shrub is protected depends on the municipal tree protection statutes, the Federal Nature Conservation Act (BNatSchG) and the Saxon Nature Conservation Act (SächsNatSchG).

Municipal tree protection bylaws

Towns and municipalities have the option of placing trees and shrubs under protection by means of a so-called tree or shrub protection statute. Trees and shrubs covered by the statutes may only be felled or severely pruned if the relevant local authority has authorised this in advance. This authorisation can also be linked to the obligation to carry out replacement planting or the payment of compensation.

According to the Saxon Nature Conservation Act, trees may not be placed under protection:

- trees in the forest
- trees and shrubs on dykes, dyke protection strips, dams, water reservoirs and flood retention basins
- trees, shrubs and hedges in allotment gardens

Sachverhalt

Even if a tree or other woody plant is not protected by a tree protection statute, for example because it is not covered by the scope of the statute or because the municipality has not issued a tree protection statute at all, there may still be a ban on felling due to species and biotope protection.

During the vegetation period from 1 March to 30 September, it is generally prohibited to cut down, uproot or remove trees, hedges and shrubs. Careful shaping and maintenance pruning is permitted. Trees in forests, on short rotation plantations (for example energy wood plantations) and on commercially or privately used horticultural land are exempt from the felling ban.

Some trees and shrubs are protected by law as biotopes and may not be removed all year round, such as hollow-rich islands of old wood, hollow-rich individual trees or fruit trees in orchards. Trees that serve as breeding or resting places for particularly protected species such as birds, certain beetles or bats are also protected all year round.

If the grove is located in a protected area under nature conservation law, this may also result in restrictions.

Note: Fines may be imposed for violations of pruning bans. If you are not sure whether you are allowed to cut down or severely prune a tree or shrub without official authorisation, you can seek advice from the competent authorities listed below.

Contact point

- exemption from the tree protection statutes: Municipal or city administration
- exemption from species or biotope protection: Lower nature conservation authority at the district office; in Dresden, Leipzig and Chemnitz at the city administration
