Sachverhalt

The contact details of the recognised and notified experts are published in standardised directories.

If you already have a public appointment in accordance with § 36 GewO in the requested field and have completed suitable further training, you often also provide proof of the necessary expertise for recognition in accordance with § 18 BBodSchG in conjunction with the respective ordinance. This means that there are some experts who, in addition to their public appointment in accordance with Section 36 GewO, are also recognised in accordance with Section 18 BBodSchG.

Note: Experts whose expertise, reliability and technical equipment have been checked in another federal state in accordance with comparable requirements are usually also recognised as experts in accordance with Section 18 BBodSchG in the federal states. A new examination is not necessary.

Please note! The recognition and notification authorities responsible for this vary from state to state. These are often the chambers of industry and commerce, but the chambers of engineers, chambers of agriculture or state offices may also be responsible.

- The recognition authorities will also check your reliability, technical equipment and liability insurance.
- Your technical suitability is checked by committees or specialised bodies for soil protection and contaminated sites. You must also bear the costs here.
- The review procedure usually consists of an assessment of the expert reports you have submitted as well as a written report and a technical discussion.
- You will generally be informed of the result of the review in writing. On request, the decision can be explained in an interview.
- If the recognition authority has checked all the requirements and your professional suitability/expertise has been established, you will be recognised and notified by means of a decision and you will receive a certificate.

Your recognition will be published in the nationwide list of experts and also announced in the publication organ of the recognition authority.
