Volltext

Application for a certificate of seclusion in accordance with the German Condominium Act (WEG)

You must apply for a certificate of seclusion if you wish to claim a permanent right of residence (the right to permanently occupy a specific apartment in the building) or condominium ownership (special ownership).

In addition to the communal facilities of an apartment building in which all owners of the residential units have an ownership share, the residential units and certain rooms assigned to these residential units that are not used for residential purposes (cellar rooms, parking spaces, etc.) are so-called special property.

The local court (land registry) requires, among other things, the submission of a certificate of separate ownership and a partition plan, which must be issued or confirmed by the lower building supervisory authority, for the registration and the associated creation of the land registers.

The certificate of seclusion proves that a condominium or other rooms within the meaning of the German Condominium Act (WEG) are sufficiently structurally separated from other apartments and rooms.

The certificate is issued by the responsible building authority after examining your documents.
