Teaser	The vocational training relationship ends at the end of the training period and upon successful completion of the final examination.
Volltext	The vocational training relationship ends at the end of the training period and the successful completion of a final examination before the examination board(s) of the chamber responsible for the vocational training. Admission to the final examination is granted to those who have completed their training period and can provide evidence of all other requirements (e.g. intermediate examination). Furthermore, anyone who has been trained in a recognized training occupation at a vocational training institution (e.g. youth development center) will be admitted. In the case of outstanding performance, admission to the final examination may be granted before the end of the regular training period. The trainee will receive a written certificate after successfully passing his/her final examination. This marks the end of the training relationship.
