Volltext	If you are the owner of real estate (or, in the new federal states, the user of agricultural and forestry property) that is not exempt from property tax, the tax office will issue a property tax assessment notice to you. This property tax assessment notice serves the municipality as the basis for the property tax assessment notice to be issued. In the case of property tax, the subject of the tax is the property as defined by the Valuation Act. Property tax is assessed in a three-stage procedure. The so-called unit value to be determined by the tax office is decisive for the calculation of the property tax. The tax assessment amount is calculated by applying a tax assessment figure to the assessed value. In the case of agriculture and forestry in the new federal states, the replacement economic value takes the place of the assessed value. The assessment notice is the basic notice for the property tax assessment notice, the property tax assessment notice in turn is the basic notice for the property tax assessment notice. If you have objections to the amount of the assessed value of the property, you must appeal against the assessment notice within the appeal period; if you have objections to the tax assessment figure, you must appeal against the property tax assessment notice. The property tax rate for properties in the old federal states is between 2.6 and 3.5 percent, for properties in the new federal states it is between 5.0 and 10 percent; for agricultural

and forestry businesses it is 6 percent in both the old and the new federal states. Under certain conditions, you may be exempt from property tax. This is the case, for example, if you are a charitable corporation and the property is used exclusively and directly for charitable purposes. However, exemption is not usually possible if the property is used for agricultural, forestry or residential purposes. You can apply for exemption from property tax at the tax office.

Erforderliche Unterlagen

The basis for the property tax assessment amount is already established in the valuation procedure. The tax office will therefore ask you - if necessary - to submit a declaration to determine the assessed value, enclosing the declaration forms. If necessary, the tax office will ask you to enclose further documents. If you wish to apply for a property tax exemption, please ask your tax office how and with which documents the application should be made.

Voraussetzungen

The tax liability arises if you are the owner of real estate.

Verfahrensablauf

If you have purchased a property or, for example, built on a property that you own, you may receive a request from your tax office to submit a declaration to determine a unit value. The tax office will then assign you a unit value that has already been determined or update the unit value. The value determined during the assessment forms the basis for the property tax assessment. Multiplied by the tax assessment figure, it results in the property tax assessment amount. The tax office will inform you of this in a notice. These notices have permanent effect, i.e. as long as the actual and legal circumstances of the property do not change, these notices will remain effective in the future. The municipality entitled to levy the tax also receives notification of the property tax assessment amount. It will set the property tax on this basis.
