Teaser	Copayments for medicines, remedies and treatments may not exceed two percent of annual gross income.
Volltext	Co-payments must be made for medications, remedies and treatments that are prescribed. However, people with health insurance do not have to pay more than two percent of their annual gross income.
	For chronically ill people, the burden limit is one percent of annual gross income.
	Gross income includes all income with which insured persons finance their living expenses - for example:
	Salarypensions or pension payments,Capital interestRental income
	The annual gross income of all dependents living in the household is taken into account when calculating the burden limit. These may be spouses, civil partners under the Civil Partnership Act or children covered by family insurance.
	For families, the burden limit is reduced by the child allowance and, if applicable, the allowance for the spouse.

	In the case of recipients of social assistance, the standard rate of the head of household is used as the basis for calculating the burden limit, which is why the allowances cannot be assessed.
	Children and young people up to the age of 18 are generally exempt from co-payments. Exception: co-payment for travel expenses.
