Teaser	Dying people or their relatives who need support can turn to an outpatient hospice service. If outpatient care and support are not sufficient, care in an inpatient hospice is possible.
Volltext	Dying people or their relatives who need support can turn to an outpatient hospice service. In outpatient hospice work, volunteers from hospice services accompany seriously ill and dying people and their relatives. They come to your home regularly for a few hours as needed - also as a supplement to an outpatient nursing service. The employees of the hospice services also accompany you in old people's and nursing homes, in institutions for the disabled and in hospital. Outpatient hospice services are financed by health insurance subsidies and donations. The support of those affected and their relatives is free of charge. Under certain conditions, inpatient or day-care services in hospices are available. This includes palliative medical and nursing care. Guest rooms are usually available for your relatives.
