Teaser	As a public transport company, do you transport people with disabilities free of charge? Then you can have the corresponding fare losses reimbursed.
Volltext	Severely disabled people who are significantly impaired in their ability to move around on the road, or who are helpless or deaf, are transported free of charge on local public transport. As a transport company, you can apply for reimbursement of the fare losses resulting from the free transportation of severely disabled persons. Reimbursement of fare losses is regularly made on a flat-rate basis according to a percentage of the proven fare revenue set by the federal state. If you can prove by means of traffic counts that the ratio between passengers transported free of charge and other passengers exceeds the flat-rate percentage by at least one third, you will be reimbursed, on application, not only the reimbursement amount calculated on the basis of the flat-rate percentage, but also the proven proportion exceeding one third.
