Teaser	As a recognized non-profit association, you can benefit from tax concessions. You can find out more about this below.
Volltext	Like any corporation, associations are generally subject to comprehensive income tax liability. However, the state grants considerable tax concessions to both registered and non-registered associations that pursue charitable purposes. This also applies to associations that pursue charitable or ecclesiastical purposes. Extensive tax exemption is granted for corporation tax and trade tax (income tax) as well as reductions in VAT. In addition, charitable associations can receive donations and issue donation receipts, which then serve as the basis for the donor to deduct special expenses. Income from part-time work, e.g. as a trainer, educator or supervisor in the service of a non-profit association, is tax-free up to a total of EUR 3,000 per year (up to EUR 2,400 for years prior to 2021). In addition, so-called organization managers who work part-time in a non-profit association can be paid tax-free remuneration of up to EUR 840 per year (up to EUR 720 for years prior to 2021).

Verfahrensablauf

The tax office examines whether the requirements for granting non-profit status are met in a two-part procedure.

Firstly, the valid articles of association are used to check whether the articles of association sufficiently specify which purposes the association is pursuing and how it intends to achieve them. This review is based on a legally prescribed model statute. If the review shows that the articles of association meet the requirements for non-profit status, the tax office issues a notice of assessment. This also confirms that the association is entitled to receive tax-privileged donations and issue donation receipts.

In a further procedure, the tax office must assess whether the association has actually pursued its statutory objectives to an appropriate extent. This review usually takes place every three years. Once the review process has been completed, the association receives a corporation tax assessment notice or a so-called exemption notice.
