Teaser	If the other parent does not provide maintenance, you can get support from the assistance and get advice on how to proceed.
Volltext	Parents are obliged to provide maintenance to their children. If a parent does not live with his or her child in a household, he is obliged to pay maintenance through monetary payments. However, this parent does not always do this. There can be various reasons for this. For those affected, the question arises as to how they can proceed here. A child has a legal right to maintenance. The Youth Welfare Office, in the form of assistance, can advise children and their affected parents and support them in asserting the claim. For example, the assistance can help to determine the amount of the maintenance payments and possibly also create a title with which the maintenance can be enforced. However, the means to be initiated are always individual and can be discussed in a personal conversation.
