Teaser	Tolerated foreigners can obtain a residence permit for employment if they meet certain requirements.
Volltext	As a tolerated foreign person, you can obtain a residence permit for employment if you have completed qualified vocational training or university studies in Germany. A qualified vocational training exists if you have completed vocational training in a state-recognised or comparably regulated training occupation. The training period must have been at least two years. If you obtained your university degree abroad, you can obtain a residence permit if your foreign degree has been legally recognised in Germany or is comparable to a German university degree. The Central Office for Foreign Education is responsible for the recognition of foreign university degrees in Germany (see "Further information"). In addition, it is necessary that you have pursued employment commensurate with your degree for two years without interruption with your foreign university degree. Employment is appropriate if it usually requires an academic degree and the knowledge acquired through higher education is needed, at least in part or indirectly. Shorter interruptions of employment, which should not normally exceed a total duration of three months, are harmless.

You can also obtain a residence permit if you have obtained your professional qualification abroad, have been in qualified employment for three years without interruption and have not relied on public funds (with the exception of benefits to cover the necessary costs of accommodation and heating) within the last year before applying for the residence permit for your subsistence and that of your family members or other household members. were instructed. Skilled employment exists if it is usually carried out by persons with skills, knowledge and abilities acquired through qualified vocational training or academic training. Shorter interruptions (up to three months) are generally harmless,

The residence permit is issued for a limited period. Holders of the "Ausbildungsduldung" are granted a residence permit for two years if they wish to take up employment that corresponds to the qualification acquired in vocational training.
