Volltext	If a plot of land belonging to a community hunting district or attached to a community hunting district is damaged by hoofed game, wild rabbits or pheasants, the hunting cooperative must compensate the injured party for the damage caused by game. The compensation paid from the cooperative fund is to be borne by the individual hunting companions in proportion to the area of their participating properties. If the hunting leaseholder has taken over the compensation of the game damage in whole or in part, the hunting lessee is liable for compensation. The hunting cooperative's obligation to pay compensation remains in force if the injured party is unable to obtain compensation from the lessee. Damage caused by game to properties that are

Sachverhalt

attached to a private hunting district must be compensated by the owner or the beneficiary of the private hunting district. In the case of leasing, the hunting leaseholder is liable if he has undertaken to compensate for the damage caused by game in the lease agreement. In this case, the owner or the usufructuary is liable only to the extent that the injured party cannot obtain compensation from the lessee.

In the case of land belonging to a private hunting district, apart from the cases referred to in paragraph 2, the obligation to compensate for damage caused by game (paragraph 1) is governed by the legal relationship existing between the injured party and the person entitled to hunt. Unless otherwise specified, the person entitled to hunt is liable for compensation if he or she is responsible for the damage due to inadequate shooting.

In order to assert claims for compensation, the wildlife damage must be reported to the local regulatory authorities of the authorities and district-free city. Field damage must be reported 1 week after knowledge, forest damage by 1 May or 1 October of the year after knowledge.

Payments to compensate for the damage caused by wild animals are made after notification and assessment of the damage by the responsible wildlife compensation offices.
