Teaser	If you want to acquire the general higher education entrance qualification (Abitur) as an adult and are not working, then you can apply to a second-chance school.
Volltext	A college in Germany is usually an institute of adult education for obtaining the general higher education entrance qualification. As a rule, it takes three years until you can take the nationwide Abitur. After two years, it is usually possible to obtain the school part of the Fachhochschulreife. In contrast to the evening grammar school, lessons are given during the day and are therefore aimed at former working people who want to expand their school qualifications through full-time lessons. In addition to attending the Kolleg, it is therefore not possible to continue working in a profession in terms of time and law – with the exception of "part-time jobs". As a rule, the prerequisite for attending a college is a secondary school or comparable qualification and vocational training that has already been completed. Alternatively, however, the management of a family household or proven unemployment and several years of professional activity are accepted. The minimum age is 18 years. Depending on the federal state, there are different regulations. The so-called introductory phase (11th grade) is used to acquire the basic knowledge for the two-year qualification level. In some colleges, there are preliminary courses before the actual college visit, e.g. at the colleges in Berlin, to refresh idle knowledge in central subjects. In some federal states, it is also mandatory to pass an admission test. The selection of subjects and the Abitur examinations at a college are based on those of the general grammar school,
