Modul
Sachverhalt
Volltext

Forestry cooperatives (FBG) are private-law associations of landowners. In particular, they have the purpose of compensating for the disadvantages of small land size in management and various structural deficiencies in the management of their forest areas. In order to better differentiate between the FBG and the type of management, the FBG in Brandenburg is referred to as a forest association and a forest community. They differ according to the objectives or tasks set out in the statutes. The forest association is characterized by a parcel-specific management according to area and owner, the properties affiliated to the forest association must be findable in nature. In a forest community, joint cross-border management of the total area is carried out.
