Teaser	If you are legally divorced and are unable to support yourself, you can demand reasonable maintenance from your former spouse.
Volltext	In principle, you and your former spouse are initially obliged to provide for your own maintenance after the divorce. If you are unable to do so after the divorce, you can make a claim for maintenance. If you and your divorced spouse are unable to agree on an appropriate amount of maintenance, you can assert your claim for maintenance in court. For details, please contact a lawyer. Further information can also be found in the maintenance guidelines of the higher regional courts.
