Teaser	Have you been banned from practising your trade due to unreliability? Then you can usually apply for the reinstatement of your commercial activity after 1 year under certain conditions.
Volltext	As a rule, you can apply for the reinstatement of your trade only after 1 year. This period is prescribed by law. It gives you the opportunity to show the authorities that the reasons for unreliability have ceased to exist by changing your lifestyle. For overriding reasons - for example, economic or structural policy reasons - you may exceptionally be allowed to exercise your trade again earlier. This applies, for example, in the event that the resumption of the trade <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• creates additional jobs or</li> <li>• enables creditors of your business to reduce their debts.</li> </ul> The mere cessation of the circumstances justifying unreliability is not sufficient to shorten the one-year period.          Notice:          If you resume the activity after the reinstatement, you must at least file a trade report with the competent authority at the same time. The resumption is to be considered as a new start of the trade.
