Teaser	If you wish to use a document from a Bavarian state authority or a municipality abroad, you may need to have the document notarized. The authenticity of the document can be certified by legalization or the issue of an apostille.
Volltext	The governments certify German public documents issued by state authorities or municipalities in the respective government district by issuing an apostille in accordance with the Hague Convention or as part of the legalization procedure for foreign representations. In many cases, this involves documents issued by registry offices, registration certificates, school or university certificates, etc. The apostille is a simplified form of certificate of authenticity. It certifies the authenticity of the signature, the capacity in which the signatory has acted and, where applicable, the authenticity of the seal or stamp affixed to the document. It only replaces legalization in the contracting states of the Hague Convention Abolishing the Requirement of Legalization for Foreign Documents. There are international agreements according to which certain documents are exempt from the apostille. German public documents are generally only recognized abroad if their authenticity has been confirmed by the competent representation of the country concerned in Germany (legalization). The representations of foreign countries generally require the German documents to be legalized by the competent German authorities beforehand.
