Teaser	Single taxpayers can claim the tax relief amount for single parents.
Volltext	Single taxpayers can claim the relief amount for single parents if their household includes at least one child for whom they are entitled to child benefit or an allowance for children. It is assumed that the child belongs to the household if the child is registered in the home of the single taxpayer. If the child is registered with several taxpayers, the single person who also receives the child benefit for the child is generally entitled to the relief amount. The prerequisite for this is the identification of the child by means of the identification number assigned to this child. If there is one such child in the household of the single taxpayer, the relief amount in the calendar year is EUR 4,260. For each additional child who meets the requirements, the relief amount increases by EUR 240. Taxpayers who do not meet the requirements for joint assessment or who are widowed and do not form a household with another adult person are considered to be single, unless they are entitled to child benefit or an allowance for children. A household community with another person is generally assumed if this person is registered as having their main or secondary residence in the taxpayer's home. This presumption is rebuttable unless the taxpayer and the other person live in a marriage-like or civil partnership-like relationship. The relief amount is reduced by one twelfth for each full calendar month in which the conditions were not met. A taxpayer can claim the relief amount for single parents pro rata temporis in the year of marriage,
