Teaser	If you have and live in several apartments in Germany, one apartment is your main residence and all other apartments are secondary residences. You must inform the registration office which apartments you have and which of them is your main or secondary residence.
Volltext	If you have several homes in Germany, the registration law distinguishes between a main residence and a secondary residence. Homes abroad are not taken into account when determining main and secondary residences, even if they would fulfill the objective criteria of a main residence. The main residence of single persons is their predominantly used home. If you have more than one home, the home that you use most of the time is your main home. The calculation is based on one year. If the comparison of the periods of residence in the respective home does not lead to a clear result, it depends on where the focus of your living relationships lies. Living relationships include, for example, the type of home, personal ties, social activities and membership of clubs and other organizations. The main residence of a married resident or a resident living in a registered civil partnership is the home primarily used by the family or civil partner. In the case of married residents or residents living in a registered civil partnership who are permanently separated, the same criteria apply as for single persons. For minors, the main residence is the home of the legal guardian. If they live separately, the main residence is the home of the person with custody that
