The settlement permit is an unlimited residence title and entitles the holder to pursue gainful employment. The requirements for obtaining it vary depending on the purpose of residence.

Volltext

The settlement permit establishes a permanent right of residence in Germany. It is unlimited in terms of time and territory and may not be subject to any conditions or requirements.

The requirements for obtaining a settlement permit are correspondingly high. In addition to a secure livelihood and sufficient living space, the granting of a settlement permit also requires that the residence permit has been held for five years (as a rule), as well as essentially no criminal record, sufficient knowledge of the German language and basic knowledge of the legal and social order and living conditions in Germany.

Although the granting of a settlement permit generally requires, among other things, five years' possession of a residence permit, the Residence Act also provides for exceptions. For example, for

- foreign spouses of Germans (usually after 3 years),
- for successful self-employed persons (at their discretion after 3 years),
- Foreigners who are employed as civil servants by a German employer (after 3 years),
- Foreigners who have successfully completed a domestic vocational training program or a domestic course of study (after two years),
- Holders of a residence permit as a skilled worker (after 3 years).
- Holders of an EU Blue Card (after 27 months of highly qualified employment, after just 21 months if proof of sufficient German language skills is provided; further simplifications apply in the case of previous stays in member states).
- In special cases, highly qualified persons may be granted a settlement permit as their first title (e.g. scientists with special technical knowledge or specialists).

In addition to the required periods of possession of a
