Teaser	If you need a certificate of capacity to marry abroad, you can apply for it at your local registry office.
Volltext	In some countries you need a certificate of no capacity to marry if you want to get married there as a German citizen. This also applies if you are subject to German law as a stateless person, a homeless person or a foreign refugee. The registry office at your place of residence or where you are registered will issue the certificate of capacity to marry. If you do not have a residence in Germany, the last registry office at your previous place of residence is responsible. If you have never been to Germany or have only been there briefly, the Registry Office I in Berlin will issue the certificate. The certificate of capacity to marry is a certificate from the registry office that you are permitted to marry the person named in the certificate of capacity to marry under German law.
Erforderliche Unterlagen	If you are a German citizen and are entering into your first marriage, you will need the following documents: valid identity card or passport current certified extract from the birth register or certified copy of the birth certificate from the registry office of your place of birth If you were born abroad: Birth certificate or international birth certificate If you have been married/partnered before: Marriage certificate/civil partnership certificate of the last previous marriage with dissolution note In case of marriage/divorce abroad: foreign marriage certificates and legally binding divorce decrees of all previous marriages In case of divorce in another EU country: Certificate pursuant to Article 39 on decisions in matrimonial
