Teaser	Would you like to get your driver's license before your 18th birthday? Then you can take part in "Accompanied driving from 17"?
Volltext	Young people can start their driving school training one year earlier. After successfully passing their driving test, they receive a license for categories B and BE (passenger cars). However, they may only drive when accompanied by a named person. The accompanying person must meet certain requirements.

Requirements as for a normal driving license

Earliest start of training:

- 16 ½ years old
- Theoretical test at the earliest three months before the 17th birthday
- practical driving test one month before the birthday.

The application is submitted via the driving school, the legal guardians (usually the parents) must give their consent. The accompanying persons must be named.

After the application has been submitted, the authorities check whether there are any suitability concerns.

Only when suitability has been established can the TÜV be commissioned to carry out the test.

In any case, the theoretical and practical driving test with compulsory training must be taken at a driving school.

The test certificate is issued after the practical driving test has been passed, provided that the driver has already reached the age of 17 at this time.

Sachverhalt

The person concerned, including the driving school, will not be informed. The number of accompanying persons is not limited. Participation in a preparatory event is voluntary, but is expressly and strongly recommended. The accompanying persons are not driving instructors. They are therefore not permitted to interfere with the steering wheel. Instead, they should provide assistance in anticipatory driving, pass on their experience and exert a moderating influence on driving behavior. They should be able to behave correctly in conflict situations; this is often difficult without preparation. The obligation to be accompanied by a chaperone no longer applies from the age of 18.
