Parents usually take care of the upbringing and care of a child. However, it may also make sense for the state to help with the child's upbringing.

Volltext

Every family has arguments from time to time. Arguments between parents or between parents and children. If the arguments become more and more frequent, this is a great burden. Parents and children sometimes need support. Help with parenting offers this support. Hilfen zur Erziehung is the name given to various offers of help for families with problems and in crisis situations.

If you would like to receive help from the youth welfare office, you must contact them. The help is not an obligation, but an offer. The first step is often a consultation with the youth welfare office. You can explain your problem there. The staff can make suggestions on how to solve the problem.

Children, teenagers or young adults can also seek help from the youth welfare office on their own. The parents do not need to know about this if the young person does not want it.

Educational support is geared towards the interests of the child or young person. The basis for granting help is the help plan procedure. The parents/guardians, the children or young people and the youth welfare office are involved in the help plan procedure.

There are different types of educational support:

- An educator advises and supports parents with parenting issues (parenting advice).
- A therapist tries to help the family in group sessions (social group work).
- A psychological or socio-educational specialist tries to help individual family members (parenting support).
- Children receive help if their parents have a mental illness.

- Care and support for a child in an emergency situation. For example, the child can be placed in a foster family or a residential home for a certain period of time (home education or supervised forms of living and intensive individual socio-educational care).
- For children with mental disabilities, there is also integration assistance (not part of educational assistance). They are of course also entitled to educational assistance. Assistance and integration assistance can be provided in parallel or in combination.
